

Part 1

Caught the sun

Looks like you
caught the sun
today!

~ you got sunburned

Set the table (US) / lay the table (GB)

Can you set the table for dinner, please?

~ prepare the dining table

catch sb's eyes

The bright red dress caught everyone's eye at the party.

~ To attract someone's attention, especially visually

Make a move

We've been planning this for weeks—it's time to make a move.

~ To take action / make a decision

~ To start romantic or sexual advances

miss the point

- I think you missed the point of what she was trying to say.

~ To fail to understand the main idea or important part of something.

tell the time

Can you tell the time on an analog clock?

~ To read and say what time it is by looking at a clock or watch.

make up for lost time

 To do something faster or more often because you were delayed or missed out earlier.

~ recover time after a delay Ex:
We left late, so we had to drive fast to make up for lost time.

~ To enjoy or do more of something you missed
Ex: After being apart for years, they're trying to make up for lost time together.

keep a straight face

- He told the joke so seriously that I could barely keep a straight face.
- ~ To avoid laughing or showing emotion, especially when something is funny or awkward.

pick sb's brain

Can I pick your brain about your marketing strategy?

~ To ask someone for detailed information or advice, usually because they are knowledgeable or experienced in a topic.

go round in circles

- We've been arguing for hours and just going round in circles.

~ To keep discussing or doing the same thing without making progress — like being stuck in a loop.
